

BARNET HERE WITH SALT COD

DOCKED AT PEW WHARF WITH
190,000—DRAGGER WITH RED-
FISH AT GORTON'S.

The waterfront was practically bare of fresh fish arrivals since yesterday when a dragger arrived with 90,000 pounds of redfish at Slade-Gorton wharf of Gorton-Pew Fisheries for filleting; the motor vessel Baronet was at the Pew wharf of the same firm with 190,000 pounds of salt cod, and 100 barrels of cod oil cakes; while eight gill netters had 29,300 pounds of pollock.

Two swordfishermen, the Paolina with 62 fish and the A. Platt Andrew with 43 fish arrived here yesterday afternoon but do not intend to go to Boston to market until tomorrow morning, hoping for a better price.

TUNA STRIKING ON SHORE AGAIN

Tuna are apparently striking in again and those who have been following the sport all summer feel that some of the large ones will make their appearance before long.

Saturday of last week, James C. Whitehall of Worcester was out in Leon Lothrop's boat in charge of William Lightizer. About 9 o'clock in the morning, they got a good strike half way between Halibut Point and the Consolidated Lobster company, and after about a half hour's play, landed a 160-pound blue fin tuna. Something went wrong with the boat soon after the fish was hooked but even with this handicap, the fish was landed in record time.

Sunday, George E. Hodsdon of West Gloucester was out with Dr. John J. Sacco of Roslindale. This was the doctor's first trip angling for big fish. They tried Ipswich bay first, but the water was a little too rough, so coming back through the river they circled among the lobster pots off Normans Woe. They had hardly put out the lines before the doctor got a good strike. Fearing that the fish would foul some of the lobster pots, the boat was maneuvered directly over the fish and after a while was edged out into the clearing. Then followed about 40 minutes fight ending with the doctor bringing in a 100-pound yellow fin which is a pretty good record for this type of fish. It was the doctor's first tuna and he certainly was excited as a school boy over the catch.
